Book Title & Author	'Blue Chameleon' by Emily Gravett '	'The family book' by Todd Parr	'Red Rockets & Rainbow Jelly' by Sue Heap & Nick Sharratt	'You Choose' by Nick Sharratt & Pippa Goodheart	'Hello, Hello' by Brenden Wenzel	'Super duper you' by Sophie Hen
Story overview	The chameleon is lonely and tries to make new friends by changing. Chameleon thinks that you need to look like someone to be their friend. We explore whether or not this is true.	Shows that families come in many different shapes and sizes.	Shows characters liking different things all through the story (ducks, socks, cats...) but remaining friends by the end.	Encourages children to consider choices. It is the first step in teaching children that it is okay to have different opinions.	Shows different animals with different sizes, colours and shapes all saying hello to each other. No one is left out.	Is a wonderful celebration of all things that make us unique. We are not one thing, there are lots of ways you are you.

Book Title & Author	'The boy who loved everyone' by Jane Porter	'Elmer' by David McKee	'Errol's garden' by Gillian Hibbs	'Bathe the cat' by Alice B McGinty and David Roberts	'I love me' by Marvyn Harrison and Diane Ewen	'Going to the volcano' by Andy Stanton
Story overview	A little boy struggles to make friends and is often turned away for reasons unclear to him. We explore practical steps we can take to improve or support respectful relationships.	Elmer is a differently coloured elephant who tries to change so that he can fit in but learns to be proud of his difference by the end of the story.	Errol discovers that having neighbours who are different and have different skills, enables him to build his dream garden.	Shows a family desperately trying to tidy up the house before Nan arrives. The family has two dads, although that is never mentioned in the text, which is to remind children that all families are different, but at the same time, all family members help around the house.	A book of affirmations for young children to build their self-esteem. 'I am brave, I am strong...I love me'.	The characters are really good at making sure no one is left out as they travel to the volcano. Everyone is different and that's what makes the trip so successful.

Story overview	A story about a little girl starting school with little English. She looks different to the other children and struggles to fit in.	A story about a boy who looks different. He is bullied and dreams of running away. We discuss what would happen at our school. What do we say about difference? We talk about being a bystander or choosing to stand up.	Explores the importance of names. Is it okay for me to call you a shortened version of your name? An empowering story that talks about identity and challenging assumptions.	George shuts people out and gives each person a reason: they are a girl, they wear glasses, they are too short. When it is pointed out that George has red hair and could also be excluded the penny drops. George makes sure his game is for everyone.	Tells the story of two aardvarks getting together helped by a bird who identifies things they have in common. The focus is recognising loneliness and considering how it affects mental health, choosing to help others, finding common ground.	Stereotypes are explored. What is a stereotype? How do we recognise a stereotype and how can we respond?

Story overview	How to find my pupil voice. Tells the story of a nervous child who talks in whispers. The teacher helps the child to find their voice. It's a story of perseverance, language and bravery.	To show acceptance. This book tells the story of a small boy who wants to be a mermaid. The key is Nan's attitude towards her grandson. The reader is led to believe that she will be angry about his dressing	To be proud of who I am. A story about a crayon who looks red but can only colour in blue. This is really distressing for him as he knows he should be red, and he has always been red	To look after my mental health. This story explores how to recognise feelings of sadness and their impact	A story about understanding families changing. The story starts with different colours falling in love, but later they split up. Not because they are different colours but because sometimes families change.	The first text in No Outsiders that explores gender expectations. It is a very gentle story narrated by a girl about her brother who looks different and is often thought by strangers to be a girl. The conclusion is, 'I love my brother

Book Title & Author	'And Tango Makes Three' by Justin Richardson and Peter Parnell	'Mixed' by Arree Chung	'The Boys' by Lauren Lee and Jenny Lovlie	'Milo imagines the world'.	'The Girls' by Lauren Lee and Jenny Lovlie	'My shadow is pink'
Story overview	A story which supports discussing different families and also adoption. The lesson plan focuses on the book being banned in some places around the world which enables us to explore homophobia and discrimination.	To consider responses to racist behaviour. This story supports discussions about racism and our responses to racist behaviour. The story shows the Reds, Blues, and Yellows first getting on and then segregating because the Reds say they are best. But then a Yellow and Blue fall in love...can colours mix?	To check in with people See – 'The Girls'.	To try not to judge by appearances. A story that explores the way people make assumptions about each other. Milo sits on a train and imagines the lives of other passengers but at the end there is a big surprise both for Milo and the reader.	To explore friendship - Two different books but both exploring themes of friendship through a different gender lens. The books recognise the significance of companionship in our lives and can be used to reference mental health. There are also subtle LGBTQ+ references in both texts.	To find self-acceptance. A story about a dad's response to his young son's difference. There is a clever moment in the story where we see Dad make every effort to show his son he is loved. The story is about being yourself in a world where sometimes you feel you should be something (or someone) else.

Story overview	This story focuses on responses to a young girl who chooses to wear a hijab for the first time at school. The story is a beautiful way to teach children to be proud of the person they are.	To consider attitudes towards disability - A picture book to support exploring disabilities. The focus on the story isn't on Joe and his disability, the focus is on reactions from other people, who keep saying to him 'You're so amazing!' But Joe is not amazing, he's actually just Joe.	To consider causes of racism - A powerful study of the power one group has over another and the dire consequences of unchecked prejudice.	To consider how experiences shape us – An honest depiction of a young refugee arriving in a country without parents and feeling responsible for her younger brother. The brother adapts well, but the older sister struggles. A story which teaches empathy, resilience and hope.	To show acceptance – A tale of a teddy that comes out as trans. All of Teddy's friends accept her as Tilly, no one questions her or asks Tilly to justify her actions.	Provides a fantastic opportunity to talk about democracy (one of the British Values) and its impact. A rabbit in the White House wants to marry another male bunny but is told by the animal in charge that boy bunnies can't marry boy bunnies. The animals decide to hold an election and there is a super ending. What is democracy and how does it work?
